Rare Dracula Three Sheet Movie Poster May Scare Up Big Results At Heritage Auctions

Seven foot-wide King Kong French poster may bring $40,000+ in March 22-23 in Dallas

The only known copy of an almost 7-foot-tall movie poster for the 1947 reissue of Dracula could sell for $40,000 when it crosses the block March 22-23 in Heritage Auctions’ Vintage Movie Poster Signature Auction in Dallas. The fearsome three sheet poster showing a lecherous Bela Lugosi ready to strike his next victim highlights more than 1,200 unique lots of movie monsters, stunning heroines, and a cache of rare silent movie posters discovered above an Ohio garage.

"This auction has mystery, intrigue, and hidden treasure — and we're not talking about the movies!" said Grey Smith, Director of Movie Posters at Heritage. "Many of the posters offered are appearing at auction for the first time and some were just recently discovered in an attic above a garage in Ohio."

A large-sized French double grande for RKO's 1933 classic King Kong vibrantly depicts the hulking super-ape attempting to roll a band of intrepid explorers off a moss-covered log. Fresh, bright colors immortalize one of the film's iconic scenes on a poster that spans more than 5 feet high by more than 7 feet wide and which is expected to sell for $40,000+. It is one of two Kong posters in the auction, the other being a Style B French grande poster, cast in Rene Peron's signature art deco style, which may sell for $15,000+.

A rare one sheet for Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy's 1930 signature short Another Fine Mess is considered one of the finest known to exist and is expected to sell for $25,000+. "One sheets for short subjects are as scarce as hen's teeth," Smith said. "Most theaters didn't want to spend the money to promote a short that was basically tacked on to a full feature so the one sheets that do exist are extremely scarce and desirable."
A one sheet for Cimarron, RKO's 1931 big budget Western comes to auction with provenance from The Berwick Discovery of Lost Movie Posters, a trove of posters discovered in an attic in Berwick, Pa. in early 2012. The Cimarron poster features glorious art by Frederic C. Madan and is expected to sell for $20,000 as the previous copy sold for more than $100,000.

Speaking of rare finds, a collection of rare posters that were discovered earlier this year hidden above a garage in Troy, Ohio are expected to bring more than $12,000. The posters were produced by the Strobridge Litho Co. for a variety of silent films and events between 1895 and 1918. The stash includes two rare one sheets for His Birthright and The Temple of Dusk, both starring Sessue Hayakawa, the first Japanese American actor to find stardom in the United States and Europe. Also in the trove are four, 1890s Barnum and Bailey circus posters, including a rare German language poster, and a crisp promotional poster of boxer James J. Corbett, aka "Gentleman Jim," valued at $1,500.

The auction also features original poster artwork by artist Mike Bryan, whose photo realist paintings breathed life into the signature images used on the poster for Orion's Platoon, in 1986, and RoboCop, in 1987. The art was created using a sophisticated combination of airbrush, ink, and colored pencil on a blueprint ghosted image from a photograph on paper. Bryan's paintings enjoy a solid place in modern pop culture. Both make their auction debut with an $8,000+ and $10,000+ estimate, respectively.

Additional rarities include but are not limited to:

A Style B from Gilda, the 1946 classic starring Rita Hayworth and Glenn Ford. Est. $20,000+.

A unique one sheet from The Little Minister, 1934, starring Katharine Hepburn. Est. $5,000.
A lot of 114 photos from Haxan: Witchcraft Through the Ages, director Benjamin Christensen's 1922 haunting study of the supernatural. The film was banned in the United States because of its graphic scenes and remains the most expensive Scandinavian silent film ever produced. Est. $4,000+.

Likely the only Pre-War release Australian day bill for Warner Brothers' 1927 landmark film The Jazz Singer known to exist. The poster's artful background depicts star Al Jolson in blackface and creates a beautiful piece of memorabilia for a film that began the revolution of talking pictures. Est. $5,000.

A selection of nearly 40 Japanese language posters, including a group of 15 rare travel posters promoting rail travel throughout the country, led by a stunning 1930s Summer at Miho Peninsula poster for the Nagoya Rail Agency. Est. $800.

Production Code Basics – For Movie Still Collectors is the first reference book written on how to use movie still production codes to help identify unknown movie stills and costumes.

Production codes came into use around 1912 as the United States became the major international supplier of films and movie studios were driven to increase their production due to increased demand. By 1920, production codes were used by every major film studio and became an indispensable tool utilized in almost every department. Some studios even used production codes to mark their costumes and props.

Production Code Basics – For Movie Still Collectors covers every phase from the initial creation and why they were needed through the filming process to show the use of stills through each department. Also included is a breakdown of major studios and different variations each studio used. Explanations are included on the process outside of the major studios and cover such areas as states rights, exports, independent studios, distribution, multiple markings and much more.

Production Code Basics – For Movie Still Collectors is the reference companion book to the authors’ popular Movie Still Identification Book that features over 45,000 production codes and is the only book of its kind as well.
NEW PRODUCTION CODE BASICS BOOK TO BE RELEASED AT CINEVENT

The official release of the Production Code Basics book will be at Cinevent, scheduled for May 22-25, 2014. When released, the list price for this publication will be $19.95 plus shipping in the U.S. However, for a LIMITED TIME we are offering this great book for a special pre-release price.

SPECIAL PRE-RELEASE PRICE

From now until its release at Cinevent, you can get your copy of Production Code Basics - For Movie Still Collectors for a special pre-release price of $15.00, including shipping in the U.S. Purchasers who will be attending Cinevent will be able to pick up their copies there. Those not attending will receive their copy in the mail shortly after Cinevent.

Purchasers of our 2013 Movie Still Identification Book should contact Ed to obtain their FREE COPY!
MoviePosterBid.com has re-scheduled their current auction’s date as March 12 to March 26th.
WE’RE GOING TO CINEVENT

We are very excited to be participating in this year’s Cinevent which will be held May 22-25 in Columbus, Ohio -- and we’re coming with a mission.

FRUSTRATED WITH THAT STACK OF UNKNOWN MOVIE STILLS?

Can’t sell them; don’t know what title; can’t get rid of them because they might be something really good; they continue to pile up!

SO WHAT CAN YOU DO??

BRING THOSE UNKNOWN MOVIE STILLS TO CINEVENT!

THAT’S RIGHT! Bring them to Cinevent. LAMP is coming back to Cinevent for the first time since 2006. Last time dealers told us that one of the biggest problem areas was identifying unknown movie stills.

We listened!!! So, THIS TIME, we’re bringing 50,000 production codes to help you identify those unknown production, shorts, serial, series, TV, and portrait stills.

BEST OF ALL – IT’S FREE!

Courtesy of LAMP, LAMP’s Wonderful Sponsors and Cinevent!!

We will be set up in the lobby near the registration tables, so bring that stack of stills and hopefully we can help you get them out of the closet and back into your inventory.
While We Are at Cinevent ...

We will be releasing our 15\textsuperscript{th} reference book titled, \textit{Production Code Basics – For Movie Stills Collectors} – which is the first reference book on production codes and the companion book to our popular \textit{Movie Still Identification Book}.

We will also be making a presentation to the industry just before the \textbf{Hollywood Poster Auction} at 12:30 on Saturday. Here is our announcement:

\begin{center}
\textbf{LAMP Presentation}

In Louisiana they’re called \textit{Hollywood On The Bayou}. To stills collectors, they’re known as \textit{Movie Still ID}. To archivists and researchers, they’re known as \textit{Global Cinema Research}. To magazines and authors, they’re known as the \textit{Movie Poster Data Base}. To poster collectors, they’re known as \textit{Learn About Movie Posters} – or \textit{LAMP}.

Ed & Susan Poole, the only film accessory researchers in the world, present the Learn About Network, L.L.C. – the tools they have developed to make research easier, some shocking revelations on the industry, some surprising assessments and a look at what’s coming. \textbf{Don’t miss it}.

By 1914, the movie industry had been in existence for almost 20 years. Europe was the leading producer and distributor of films, but this was in the process of changing because of World War I. Most of the European film industry was brought to a halt due to devastation and shortages of power and supplies. It never recovered its dominance in the marketplace, and the United States would step into the lead.

The year also marked a number of firsts in cinema.

- Popular silent film star Charlie Chaplin made his first appearance in Keystone Studios's Making a Living.
- Legendary director Cecille B. DeMille directed his first feature film, The Squaw Man.
- Lois Weber became the first woman to direct a feature film in the United State. The Merchant of Venice was produced by Rex. Weber also played the role of Portia. She co-directed with her husband Phillips Smalley (who played the part of Shylock).
- Bert Williams appeared as an actor in his first film Dartown Jubilee. It was one of the first movies to use an African-American actor in blackface, rather than using a white person in the same role in blackface.
- Paramount Pictures was founded by W. W. Hodkinson to help independent film makers such as Jesse Lasky and Adolph Zukor's Famous Players Film Company. It soon became the first successful nation-wide film distributor.

In the early years of the twentieth century, professional daredevils were all the rage. Men like Ormer Locklear, the first man to walk on the wing of an airplane, played to packed crowds from one end of the country to the other. It wasn't long before Hollywood noticed these daring young men, and signed the best of them to lucrative film contracts.

One of the very best in this field was Rodman "Daredevil" Law, a pioneering parachute performer whose feats of daring included a leap from the top of the Statue of Liberty, a jump from an airplane at 6,000 feet, and an attempt to ride a skyrocket over the Jersey marshes (rather than taking off, the skyrocket exploded, flinging Law quite a distance, but injuring him only slightly).

Law made four films between 1912 and 1914, with Fighting Death being his last silver screen appearance. He died in 1919 at the age of 34 of tuberculosis.
Fighting Death was staged and distributed by Herbert Blache, the husband of Alice Fay Guy. In the mid 1890s, Alice Guy had been the secretary for Gaumont. On her own time, she was allowed by Gaumont to film fictional stories to be shown to her garden club. Her innovative look at cinema contributed to the move toward fictional films in the industry, which ultimately saved the fledgling cinema from going belly up.

Guy was also the first woman director in the world. She accompanied her husband when he was sent by Gaumont to open an office in the United States in an attempt to stop some of the piracy problems occurring at the time. Alice became bored and decided to open the most progressive film studio in the world. Solax became the first U.S. movie studio to be owned by a woman.

In 1914, Thanhouser Film Corporation released their film Beating Back, based on the biography of Alphonso J. “Al” Jennings which appeared as a five-part film dramatization of Will Irwin's famous Saturday Evening Post serial.

Jennings was a prosecuting attorney in Oklahoma from 1892 until 1894. In 1895 he joined his brothers, Ed and John, in a law practice at Woodward. In October of that year Ed Jennings was killed, and John Jennings wounded, in a shootout with rival attorney Temple Lea Houston. Jennings left Woodward following Houston's acquittal in 1896 and wandered aimlessly before gaining employment as a ranch hand in the Creek Nation. This lead to him joining and ultimately leading a gang of train robbers who rivaled the famous Jesse and Frank James gang. Jennings was sentenced to life imprisonment in the Ohio State Penitentiary but was freed on technicalities in 1902. He received a presidential pardon in 1904 by President Theodore Roosevelt.

He later became a silent film star and made many appearances in films as an actor and technical advisor. Beating Back was a 6-reel film which traced Jenning's life as a train robber, convict, county official, and his venture into Oklahoma politics.

Even though the United States was taking lead in the film industry due to the effects of World War I on Europe, an Italian film released in 1914 would prove to be one of the most influential films of the time.

Cabiria is the story of a young Roman girl of noble stock who is kidnapped and taken to Carthage where she evades sacrifice to the local Gods and grows to young womanhood as a slave. The film is set during one of the Punic wars, when Rome confronted rival Carthage across the Mediterranean in North Africa.

This three-hour (14 reel) silent Italian epic from Giovanni Pastrone was an early example of spectacular and monumental film-making. It laid the pattern and groundwork for future big-budget feature-length films by directors such as D.W. Griffith and Cecil B. DeMille.

Robert Edward Auctions is proud to announce the inclusion of two exceedingly rare 1927 baseball-related movie posters in its upcoming April, 2014 auction. CLICK HERE FOR THE AUCTION PREVIEW.

The first is an insert for the 1927 First National Picture release Babe Comes Home starring Babe Ruth. This spectacular insert is one of approximately four known examples, all of which were discovered together in 2006 in the most unlikely place imaginable: the interior wall of a home being renovated. As incredible as it sounds, this poster was one of a number of significant 1920s movie posters which had been used as insulation in the walls of the home during its construction.

What makes the discovery of the Babe Comes Home insert posters all the more significant is the fact that this insert was completely unknown prior to that discovery. Rarely does such a significant movie poster discovery occur at such a late date, seventy-nine years after the date of issue, or in a more unlikely manner.

All memorabilia relating to the Babe Comes Home is incredibly rare. The film itself has been lost and currently the only other theatrical promotions from the film known to have survived are two different styles of one-sheet movie posters, two different styles of half-sheet posters (one of which was once a part of the famed Barry Halper Collection and now resides in the permanent collection of the National Baseball Hall of Fame), a complete set of lobby cards, and a few smaller promotional pieces, including heralds. In many ways, this is the most visual of all the surviving pieces.
The second piece is a stone litho one-sheet movie poster issued for the 1927 Paramount release Casey at the Bat, starring Wallace Beery in the title role. This film marked the first time that Ernest Thayer’s immortal character, Casey, was brought to life on the silver screen as a feature presentation (a silent short was released in 1913 and in 1922 DeWolf Hopper was recorded on film reciting the poem).

All paper from this film is exceedingly rare. This is only the second one-sheet we have ever seen at auction and we can only recall having seen a handful of lobby cards over the years.

Produced by Morgan Lithograph, the premier manufacturer of movie posters during that time, the poster’s exceptional graphics and vivid colors make this one of the finest baseball-movie posters ever issued.

In addition to those two highlights, REA will also feature a few additional baseball-related movie items, including a one-sheet, half-sheet, and complete set of lobby cards from the 1950 release The Jackie Robinson Story, a one sheet and complete set of lobby-cards from the 1942 release It Happened In Flatbush, a three-sheet from the 1954 release Roogie’s Bump, and an amazing group of original photographs documenting the brief cinematic career of Hall of Fame shortstop Honus Wagner in 1919 and 1920.

FIRST OFFERING OF THREE STOOGES POSTERS

This auction also features the first offering of the vintage Three Stooges lobby card and movie poster collection recently acquired by Robert Edwards Auctions.

The lobby cards are highlighted by six remarkably rare cards from the 1930s, including an example from 1934’s Men In Black (which was personally purchased by our consignor directly from Moe Howard’s daughter decades ago) and 1935’s classic Hoi Polloi. The six one-sheet posters are all from extremely desirable early titles featuring Curly, and include two extraordinary 1930s examples (1935 Uncivil Warriors and 1938 Mutts to You).
The six one-sheet posters are all from extremely desirable early titles featuring Curly, and include two extraordinary 1930s examples (including the one-sheet for The Three Stooges’ very first short, The Woman Hater’s Club; 1935 Uncivil Warriors and 1938 Mutts to You).

Catalogs mail the first week in April.

Bidding begins approximately April 7, 2014. Auction closing date: April 26, 2014.

GETTY RELEASES 35 MILLION IMAGES FOR USE AT NO COST

Getty Images announces the ability for people to easily embed and share its imagery – at no cost – for non-commercial use on websites, blogs and social media channels through a new embed tool.

With people increasingly turning to imagery to communicate and tell their stories online, the embed capability opens up Getty Images’ award-winning imagery for seamless sharing. Through the embed tool, individuals can draw on Getty Images' latest news, sports, celebrity, music and fashion coverage; immense digital photo archive; and rich conceptual images to illustrate their unique passions, ideas and interests. This innovation opens one of the largest, deepest and most comprehensive image collections in the world for easy sharing, thereby making the world an even more visual place.

“Images are the communication medium of today and imagery has become the world’s most spoken language,” said Jonathan Klein, co-founder and CEO of Getty Images. “Whether via a blog, website or social media, everyone is a publisher and increasingly visually literate.

“Innovation and disruption are the foundation of Getty Images, and we are excited to open up our vast and growing image collection for easy, legal sharing in a new way that benefits our content contributors and partners, and advances our core mission to enable a more visually-rich world.” Embedded images will include photographer attribution and, when clicked, will link back to www.gettyimages.com where the image can be licensed for commercial use. This will provide people with a simple and legal way to utilize content that respects creators’ rights, including the opportunity to generate licensing revenue.

“You have to adapt to survive,” said Kevin Mazur, celebrity photographer and director, and co-founder of WireImage Inc. “Evolving to embrace technology that encourages responsible image sharing is the way forward for the industry.”

The embed capability will be supported anywhere HTML can be posted and users will also be able to share images on major social platforms including Twitter, as well as WordPress, which, with 75 million users, is the world’s most popular blogging platform.

"This new Getty Images embed capability will open users up to a huge new creative repository in a simple, legal way," said Raanan Bar-Cohen, senior vice president of commercial services at Automattic, the company behind WordPress.com. "We look forward to seeing all the amazing ways that our users can take advantage of this new access."

This is the latest in a series of moves by Getty Images to harness technology and social media to drive broader exposure and usage of its content. Recent initiatives include a unique partnership with Pinterest, the fastest growing content sharing channel*, announced in October 2013, whereby Pinterest pays Getty Images a fee in exchange for metadata. Getty Images then shares these fees with its contributors, who also receive attribution when their content is used.

LOS ANGELES, CA – For two days in March, Hollywood will both celebrate the past and embrace the future of indie horror filmmaking at the New Beverly Cinema with Hollywood Horrorfest (HHF). Presented by filmmaker and events organizer Miles Flanagan, the inaugural event will take place at the New Beverly Cinema on Friday, March 28, and Saturday, March 29, 2014 and include competition screenings, panels, raffles, and more. Most of the festival will be free, except for the opening and closing night events, which will include red carpet screenings of The Howling and Return of the Living Dead, respectively. A portion of the $10 admission fee from each event will directly benefit the Vincent Price Art Museum. The festivities open at 3:30pm on Friday, March 28th, winding down by 2:00am that night. On Saturday, March 29th the festival will open at 10:00am and conclude at 11:00pm. The New Beverly Cinema is located at 7165 West Beverly Blvd., Los Angeles, CA 90036 (323-938-4038;www.newbevcinema.com). To learn more please visit http://www.hollywoodhorrorfest.com and https://www.facebook.com/pages/Hollywood-Horrorfest/367838323314876. See a quick trailer here: http://youtu.be/-ufQBrPevzc.

This year HHF will honor Corman alumni Joe Dante (The Howling, Gremlins) with the first Price Award. This Vincent Price Estate-authorized award, “Honors an artist whose work has achieved iconic status in the horror/fantasy genres.”

“Not only did The Howling break new ground narratively, but it also affected the way cinematic werewolves where presented - to this very day. The look created by both Dante and Rob Bottin was, and still remains, iconic. This film was a real game-changer,” says Festival Director Flanagan.

Vincent Price’s daughter and Vincent Price Art Museum Director, Victoria Price will be personally presenting the beautiful Vincent Award to Joe Dante. She will also be talking about her father and bringing awareness to her father’s museum and art legacy.

Throughout the weekend the festival is fundraising for the Vincent Price Art Museum (located at East Los Angeles College, Monterey Park, CA), with raffles and prize draws (with amazing prizes donated by Vinegar Syndrome Releasing, Shout! Factory, Distinctive Dummies, Abrams Books, and many more). Plus there will be cool zombies onsite and horror themed giveaways for fans.

Legendary actor Dick Miller (Gremlins, Terminator, Bucket of Blood) will also receive the first Impact Award for his unparalleled contribution and impact on the horror/fantasy genres.

With twelve world premieres, the festival kicks off with free screenings of films in competition starting at 3:30pm on Friday. Day 1 continues with an impressive red carpet, cast and crew reunion screening of Dante’s classic The Howling. Presented in digital hi-def, this will be the best this film has looked since its original release in 1981. The day concludes with a free West Coast Premiere of a new and exciting feature film (TBA) from two upcoming directors.

For the closing night awards evening the festival celebrates the 30th anniversary of the filming of the classic, funny (and very influential) Return of the Living Dead (ROTLD), with a gala red carpet cast & crew reunion and beautiful 35mm screening. This features one of the best ROTLD line-ups in years with Beverly Randolph, Jewel Shepard, Miguel A. Nunez, John Philbin, Thom Mathews, Brian Peck, Tony Gardner, Stanzi Stokes and the great James Karen. The entire closing night event is only $10.
CINEMA SEX SIRENS, published by Omnibus Press, is a unique collection of photographs of female stars of the '60s and '70s.

That period marked a new era of frankness in society and the movie industry lost no time in following suit after some 25 years of censorship and self-imposed regulations. The women who became the new erotic goddesses also became world-famous and defined a generation's view of sexuality.

Dave Worrall and Lee Pfeiffer's gallery illustrates a luminous collection of idealized women and offers a fascinating insight into the movies' depiction of female sexuality during the '60s and '70s. From the indisputable legends to actresses whose used their beauty to gain fame in the short-term through exploitation movies, this book provides little-known insights into their lives and careers.

CINEFEST 34 A GREAT SUCCESS!

CINEFEST 34, which ran from Thursday, March 13 through Sunday, March 16, 2014, offered a wonderful selection of silent and early talkie titles, including a group of Fox talkies from the early 1930s and a bigger-than-normal proportion of silent films. In addition to a great film line-up, Cinefest also featured dealers tables and an auction.

The Sunday morning auction was hosted by popular film critic, historian and author Leonard Maltin. The following is an excerpt from his review of Cinefest posted on his entertaining blog:

Rare Films Get New Life At Cinefest

A little-known 1932 comedy gem starring Adolphe Menjou was the audience favorite at this year’s Cinefest in Syracuse, New York. Bachelor’s Affairs got good notices from Photoplay and The New York Times when it debuted, but it’s been forgotten in the decades since and was never released to television. There’s just one word to describe it: hilarious. UCLA Film and Television Archives provided this and other 16mm prints it happens to have in its vaults. Given the response it received, I suspect it will now be a candidate for full-fledged restoration in 35mm.

Other discoveries from this Fox cache include The Sky Hawk (1930), a World War One aviation yarn set in England that hasn’t much to offer in the way of plot or dialogue; in fact, it’s almost a self-parody of stiff-upper-lip British stereotypes. Raw-ther! What makes it memorable is a climactic dramatization of a zeppelin raid over London, done entirely with miniatures and sleight-of-hand. One can’t help but wonder if Fox was inspired to make this to compete with Howard Hughes’ ongoing production of Hell’s Angels, which didn’t show up in theaters until later in 1930.

Another enjoyable discovery (which I missed at UCLA’s Festival of Preservation) is Not Exactly Gentlemen (1931), a remake of John Ford’s wonderful silent feature Three Bad Men starring Victor McLaglen, Lew Cody, and Eddie (billed as Edward) Gribbon. Fay Wray plays the young woman who’s lost her father in an Indian raid on their wagon train; she carries with her the map to a lode of gold, which bad guy Robert Warwick is determined to steal. The early talkie uses stock footage from the 1926 movie to dramatize a massive land rush, and while it’s no match for Three Bad Men it’s still an entertaining picture.

STUDY RANKS LOUISIANA TOPS IN FEATURE FILM PRODUCTION

According to a study recently released by FilmL.A., the not-for-profit film office serving the Greater Los Angeles region, Louisiana ranked number one in total live-action feature projects.

In its study, FilmL.A. research tracked movies released in 2013 to determine where they were filmed, why they filmed in the locations they did and how much was spent in production. To narrow the field of study, FilmL.A. focused on films produced by the six major studios (Disney, Warner Bros., NBC Universal, Paramount, Sony and 20th Century Fox) and five mini-major studios (Dreamworks, Lionsgate, Weinstein Co., Film District and Relativity). This yielded a study sample of 108 feature films, produced primarily in 2012 or 2013, with 23 being filmed in 2011.

Ranking locations in terms of the most number of films that were primarily produced in each, Louisiana ranked first with 18 movies. Canada and California tied with 15 movies apiece, followed closely by the United Kingdom, which hosted 12. Rounding out the top five locations was the State of Georgia, which hosted 9 films.

The Louisiana-shot films included in the report are: This is the End; Beautiful Creatures; 12 Years a Slave; Now You See Me; Parker; Broken City; 2 Guns; Grudge Match; Enders Game; The Butler; Oldboy; Snitch; Oblivion; Bullet to the Head; Escape Plan, Olympus Has Fallen; G.I. Joe: Retaliation; and Texas Chainsaw 3D.

According to the report:

Louisiana's emergence as a film production center happened quickly. After just 10 years of investment in the film industry, the Pelican State surged ahead of California, the nation's one-time film production capital. Louisiana, which some have taken to calling "Hollywood South," is now outpacing the real Hollywood by a key measure of film production volume.

The report notes that Louisiana finished second in FilmL.A.'s ranking of production-industry jobs, with Canada ranking first with 14,170 jobs.

According to the Louisiana Office of Economic Development (LED), which provided research for this report, 15 of the 18 tracked movies produced in Louisiana submitted complete audits by the end of 2013. The total budget value of these 15 films was approximately $764 million. Louisiana’s reported share of the spending totaled $587 million, or 77 percent of the total budget value.

Louisiana was well represented at the recent 2014 Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences award celebration. 12 Years A Slave, which was filmed on location in southeast Louisiana, received nine Oscar nominations. The film won the top honor of Best Picture of the Year, beating out the other locally shot film, The Dallas Buyers Club. 12 Years A Slave also received Academy Awards for Lupita Nyong'o for Best Performance by an Actress in a Supporting Role and John Ridley for Best Adapted Screenplay.

The Dallas Buyers Club, which was filmed on location in New Orleans, garnered six nominations, winning three Oscars for Matthew McConaughey for Best Performance by an Actor in a Leading Role; Bossier City native Jared Leto for Best Performance by an Actor in a Supporting Role; and Adruitha Lee and New Orleans-based Robin Mathews for Best Achievement in Makeup and Hairstyling.

These films are now added to an ever-growing list of films shot partially or entirely on location in Louisiana earning an Oscar award.

In 1951, A Streetcar Named Desire, which filmed some of its scenes on location in New Orleans, won Academy Awards for the following: Vivien Leigh for Best Actress in a Leading Role; Karl Malden for Best Actor in a Supporting Role; Kim Hunter for Best Actress in a Supporting Role; and George James Hopkins for Best Art Direction-Set Decoration, Black-and-White. The following year, New Orleans shot Panic in the Streets was awarded with the Best Writing Motion Picture Story Award for Edna and Edward Anhalt.

The 1992 Academy Awards presented the film JFK with five Oscars, including Best Picture, Best Director, Best Cinematography, Best Supporting Actor and Best Film Editing. JFK was filmed partially on location in New Orleans. In 1995, Susan Sarandon won the Best Actress Oscar for her performance in Dean Man Walking, which was shot in various locations around Louisiana.

More recent Oscar-winning Louisiana-shot films include: Halle Barry’s Best Actress Performance in 2001 Monster’s Ball; 2004’s Ray which received two Oscars: one for Jamie Foxx as Best Actor and Best Achievement in Sound Mixing; Curious Case of Benjamin Button, 2008, which earned Academy Awards for Best Achievement in Art Direction; Best Achievement in Makeup; and Best Achievement in Special Effects.

Louisiana was also featured in last years Academy Award ceremony. Django Unchained, partially filmed in Louisiana, was awarded with two Oscars. Christoph Waltz received an award for Best Performance by an Actor in a Supporting Role while Quentin Tarantino won for Best Screenplay. In addition, the animated short The Fantastic Flying Books of Mr. Morris Lessmore, which was produced at Moonbot Studios in Shreveport, won the Oscar for best animated short film.
Thanks largely to tax incentives passed by the state legislature in 2002, the film industry has emerged as a significant aspect of Louisiana’s economy. In part because of the growing significance of the industry in the economy of our state, The Historic New Orleans Collection has initiated an energetic collecting effort centered on Louisiana and film. Two major acquisitions, the Don Lee Keith Collection and the New Orleans on Film Collection, form the nucleus of the growing collecting focus. The exhibition will include posters, lobby cards, photographs, press books, and other ephemera documenting the history of movie-making in New Orleans from the silent era to the modern day.

WE’RE BACK

The year 2014 has not treated us very kindly on the home front. After suffering a series of strokes and spending the last week of 2013 in the hospital, my 86-year-old mother returned home and was placed in hospice. She passed away in her bedroom on January 20th. This is a particularly hard loss for Ed and I since my mom had lived with us since 1981, after my dad passed away. Ed always joked that she was our oldest child -- the one that never left the nest.

Less than two weeks later our 9-year-old granddaughter Ashley broke her ankle while jumping on their trampoline. Because of the break, she will have to miss her dance competition season, which is quite devastating to a child who loves to dance.

Each year, we plan a family vacation during the Mardi Gras week, since the kids are out of school. This year we returned to Orlando to hit the parks. This trip had been planned for months, as we always rent a vacation home so that the family can stay together. This year, that trip could not come soon enough.

Here’s a shot of the group in front of Cinderella’s castle. Needless to say, we all had a great time. Even Ashley, who was wheeled around the park, only missed out on two rides at Universal.

All in all, we had a great time. Now it’s on to Columbus.
